Pipeline to Prison Learning Tour FAQs

August 5-10, 2018

Q: What is the focus of the learning tour?

A: The focus of the tour is to immerse participants into the complex dynamics of the U.S. criminal justice system including diverse perspectives from individuals (men, women, people of color, young adults), as well as exposure to the systemic forces at play that have led to mass incarceration and the criminalization of marginalized groups.

The tour will be framed by three key concerns:

1. Racial Disparities in Mass Incarceration.
2. The “Pipeline-to-Prison” Today offender yesterday victims, female, poor and incarcerated.
3. Different Responses to Mass Incarceration: Immigration/Children. Advocacy, Grassroots, and Abolitionist.

The tour will narrate the connections between the broader, systematic issues of racism and incarceration at the level of systems and structures, as well as a community-level perspectives from the grassroots on the experience of arrest, incarceration, and re-entry. We also will link advocacy/legislative work to address mass incarceration with the grassroots efforts of communities who experience and respond to mass incarceration at a local level.

Our framework for engaging these questions will be through the lens of Anabaptist faith, as we seek to understand where the church is present and where it is absent and why. The purpose is to connect tour participants not only to a deeper understanding of the issues surrounding mass incarceration, but also to provide them with learning opportunities towards next steps of engagement both in their local context and the broader advocacy level.

Q: What types of places/resources will the Learning Tour include?

A: Some of the “levels” of the U.S. justice system that we will be exploring are:

- Community-Historical: prior to arrest, impacts of school policies, conversations/teaching sessions regarding the historical/racial realities of mass incarceration, the historical/current context realities of residential segregation.
- Law Enforcement: arrests, visiting a precinct, speaking with law enforcement involved in the community and in schools.
- Sentencing level: visiting a courthouse, learning how sentencing laws and the “war on drugs” has contributed to the current crisis, speaking with victim advocacy groups and how we view offenders.
- Incarceration level: visiting a variety of detention centers and jails, speaking with “returning citizens”/ ex-offenders, hearing from family members of those incarcerated.
- Re-entry: visiting and speaking with re-entry programs.

This is a very general overview. We are still working at finalizing our schedule for the learning tour and look forward to engaging the issue that we hope will compel us as believers to engage in addressing the ills of mass incarceration in meaningful ways.
